

occasionally too gruff. But this is all part of the fun, and if, like Peter Quince, the producers had prefaced their entertainment by telling us, 'Our true intent is all for your delight,' they would have been greeted with such applause as would have left no doubt that the spirit in which these shows are given is appreciated quite as much as the show itself.

Pageites besides choosing the best play also gave the best performance. They acted consistently in the spirit of light comedy, and if Jones had succeeded in pitching his voice lower, he would have made a first-class Grandfather Merryweather. Spratt gave a well-conceived study of the lugubrious and obviously henpecked Mr Slater, and the two Raeburns made a good pair of sisters. Their veneer of 'refinement' was very amusing, but the devastating eye-play of Raeburn ma. gave a better suggestion of vulgarity than the stage-Cockney, which was, as usual, much overdone.

With less talent at their disposal Daviesites wisely chose a burlesque, a type of play that calls for little subtlety and positively invites over-emphasis. Priestland was outstanding as the gloomy solicitor's clerk: for the solicitor himself Ray was too juvenile. As a muscular female in pursuit of her truant husband Carruthers-Ballantyne filled us with pity and fear for the victim.

The ill wind that blew Gurney-Randall out of the Verite cast brought them the advantage of giving the part of Mrs Anstruther to Jasmine Holmes. Apart from her the honours of the play go to Lemkin: the innocence of the Rev. Mr Cheese was humorous without ever being overdone. By contrast Oram's Colonel Anstruther was too much of a caricature even for farce. Stockley, though handicapped by too high a voice and a deficiency of inches, gave a suave presentation of an elegant gigolo crook. However, like most amateurs, he moved his hands too much. The part, it is true, is that of a French count, but even Frenchmen do at times keep their hands still. His fellow villain, Stevenson, wore his clothes with distinction and spoke his lines audibly. The scenery (also, in part at least, a Verite production) was a very good piece of work.

The lighting effects were excellent throughout, and the skill of the stage director and his special technicians calls for the highest praise. For the interval Mr Snow had arranged a well-kept surprise: the news reel showing the North African landings was received with enthusiasm.

Towards the end of Oration Quarter the Charterhouse Marionette Society regaled us with a thriller from the days of the Great Plague. As an entirely home-made show 'The Scourge' deserves more than mere faint praise. With its mixture of archaisms drawn from various period of history and its synthetic plot, based partly on Goethe's 'Zauberlehrling' and partly on one of Grimm's fairy tales, the script in form and substance is in the classical tradition of Plautus and Terence. It has, however, a nearer ancestor in G. R. Sims, for it belongs to the type of melodrama that in Victorian and Edwardian days used to draw crowded houses at the old Princess's theatre and the Adelphi. We tremble for the ill-used heroine, we shudder at the apparent triumph of evil; but in the end justice overtakes wickedness, virtue and vice are suitably rewarded, and the censor unhesitatingly affixes his approving U. Even the most puritanical parent can have no scruples in taking his offspring to a play that offers to young and old such a wealth of edification and warning.

On the mechanical side the performance was very creditable: thanks to competent wire-pulling the puppets registered emotion by appropriate gestures. But with few exceptions the lines were spoken with so little deliberation and characterization that the dramatic effect was often lost. The players have still to learn that on the puppet stage even more than in straight acting vocal modulation and calculated pauses are indispensable. Nevertheless they provided us with twenty minutes of innocent merriment, and the show was so popular that it had to be given three times.

The scenery, especially the Old London set, was good, and the music well chosen: Dukas' 'Sorcier Apprenti' was just the right thing for the dance of the spirits. There were no such technical hitches as marred last year's production, and we already look forward with pleasure to next year's marionette play, which we hope will again be entirely the work of the players themselves.

CHARTERHOUSE v WESTMINSTER

At Vincent Square. January 2nd. Won 7—1.

Westminster, who were badly out of practice, met a side that was at the top of its form. The Seager-Dalgety-Rimell triangle started almost every movement, and all the forwards, despite the mud, combined well. The defence was never seriously tested. Dalgety was perhaps the best forward. Goals were scored by Godden (4), Dalgety, Stevenson and Spratt.

CHARTERHOUSE v ETON

Away. February 18th. Won 4—3.
(Spratt, Edwards, Dalgety 2)

The first contest between the strength of Charterhouse and Eton was played at Eton on February 18th. The weather alone was sufficient to make any game a success: the ground was firm and the ball very light and bouncing. Charterhouse started off well and scored almost immediately through Spratt, after an excellent shot by Godden ma. which hit the bar. Spratt took a first-time volley and scored from close in. Eton immediately attacked and Whitfield brought off a good save from a shot which looked as though it would go into the top of the right-hand corner of the goal. The Eton attack faded and Charterhouse scored through a bouncing kick from Edwards, which the Eton goalkeeper misjudged badly and let slip over his head. Eton again returned to the attack and Whitfield had to save twice. The Eton forwards dribbled and ran very fast, and often riddled the Charterhouse defence, but shot weakly. The rest of the half was chiefly pressure by Eton, but no score resulted.

After half-time, Eton continued to press and thoroughly deserved to score, which they did through a muddle by the defence and a fumble by Whitfield. This shook up Charterhouse, who soon got two more goals, both scored by Dalgety. The second one was also due to a muddle but Dalgety did well to follow up quickly enough to take advantage of it. After this the Charterhouse defence began developing most disquieting symptoms and cracked badly, with the result that Eton scored twice more, once by an excellent shot by Macpherson, which went in like a bullet from some way out. The second came from Charlesworth. Charterhouse just held out after this and so scrambled home as winners by 4 goals to 3.

It was not a particularly creditable victory, as four of the regular Eton forwards were unable to play for one reason or another.

Boyle, the Eton captain, at inside-left did an immense amount of work and a number of dangerous runs at great speed. Fortunately his ball control was not as good as his speed. The Eton centre-half played an excellent game and Hely-Hutchinson, at left back, kicked the ball amazingly hard. Had they been at full strength, and had not two fatal mistakes been made, the result might easily have been different.

For Charterhouse, Watson played well at centre-half and had to get through a good deal of work owing to some failures by other defenders. Elliott was also sound. The forwards did some quite pretty things but lacked hostility near goal and never really looked as if they knew what they were trying to do. Godden ma. was slow in following up and unenterprising. On the whole the forwards, as a line, found the defence too fast for them and they were fortunate in getting four goals. Whitfield played very well except for one mistake which produced an Eton goal. He maintained his usual unruffled calm. After the match he received his 1st XI colours.

TEAM—G. N. Whitfield; J. G. Elliott, C. P. Bouquet; J. L. B. Edwards, R. D. F. Watson (Capt.), M. J. Rimell ma.; E. C. Dalgety, P. S. I. Godden mi., J. L. Godden ma., R. A. Saager, G. D. Spratt.

CHARTERHOUSE v ST MARY'S COLLEGE

CHARTERHOUSE v WINCHESTER

At Home. February 25th. Won 2—1.
(Dalgety, Godden ma.)

It was another grand day and again the ball was very lively and difficult to control. A considerable rearrangement of the Charterhouse team had occurred since the Eton match: but it was virtually an untried arrangement. On the whole it looked the most promising since Christmas, but was far from a settled team. The fact that three of the forwards were under 16 bodes well for the future.

The first half was rather uneventful chiefly owing to the difficulty in controlling the ball. It was averaging about 12 feet from the ground, which always makes classic football difficult.

Godden ma. was clearly uncomfortable on the wing and kept straying into the middle. Spratt was doing some good things on the right wing, but the inside forwards were being well looked after by the Winchester halves. Myers at centre-half was outstanding all through the match and Vlasto did well to get any shots in at all. Eventually Charterhouse scored through Dalgety, helped by good work by Vlasto and Spratt.

The game improved considerably in the second half and developed into an excellent struggle. Both goalkeepers had some hostile shots to deal with and did so successfully, though both enlivened the situation by dropping the ball at times. Eventually Charterhouse scored a second time, chiefly through a good run and shot by Spratt, which the goalkeeper failed to clear and which Godden ma. put into the goal decisively. Winchester then attacked but their forwards tended to fade out near goal and never looked really dangerous. However, Winchester scored from a free kick from outside the penalty area; the ball, owing to an incredible lack of knowledge of the rules of football, was more or less allowed to pursue a leisurely and not particularly difficult path into the net.

Winchester were considerably heartened by this and they quickened appreciably. But apart from forcing some corners, nothing else occurred to alter the scores.

For Winchester, Myers at centre-half was easily their best player. Their forwards lacked much punch and found the ball difficult; but the team played with the whole-hearted enthusiasm that has always been associated with Winchester.

For Charterhouse, Elliott played magnificently. Watson also played well and his heading was conspicuous. Saager was a great success at wing half once more. Bridger was fairly sound but alarmingly slow at first. The forwards played with more life than previously, but apart from the wings are poor shots. Vlasto worked hard but was well marked. Dalgety also got through a lot of work but his shooting let him down. Godden mi. did some clever things in mid-field but is very slow in moving up for a return pass and seems very diffident about shooting.

TEAM—G. N. Whitfield; J. G. Elliott, R. D. F. Watson (Capt.); R. A. Saager, B. T. J. Bridger mi., M. J. Rimell ma.; G. D. Spratt, P. S. I. Godden mi., P. A. Vlasto, E. C. Dalgety, J. L. Godden ma.

HOUSE MATCHES

FINAL

Girdlestoneites (Saager) beat Hodgsonites, 1—0.

But for Elliott Girdlestoneites would have won by a greater margin; their forwards finished poorly and were well marked by the Hodgsonite defence, who played well throughout. After the goal in the first half the game became scrappy and no further score seemed likely. The forwards of both sides were too weak to make the game exciting.

FOOTBALL SEASON, 1942—43

The question of matches is becoming more acute as there are practically no pre-war amateur sides available. School matches were reduced to Bradfield, both home and away, and fortunately Malvern has reappeared in our orbit. The first six weeks were unimpressive and the chief features were drawn contests with Bradfield both home and away. Various Army sides appeared and talked a good deal, and did not appear to appreciate a robust defence. Then came a break of a fortnight owing to the local 'invasion,' and the team immediately improved and continued to do so till the end of the season. The climax with a 6—1 victory over Malvern at Harrow. The defence always played hard and often rather dangerously employed sliding tackles. Whitfield in goal was almost extremely calm and played better than he appeared to. The backs, Metcalfe and Watson, were formidable. Metcalfe developed into a really good player. Watson had one bad patch when his positioning went to pieces. His kicking was always powerful. Of the halves Holder was disappointing, though he played intelligently; Sword was a tower of strength at centre-half, and made full use of his height; Rimell's appearance immediately improved the whole team. He should be really good one day. The brains of the forwards was Seager, who produced most of the openings. Dalgety got quite a lot of goals by appearing at the right place at the right moment. Godden was very temperamental; he played well at times and has a quick shot, but was often most unenterprising. Stevenson got through an immense amount of work but missed a lot of goals. Spratt often performed well at outside-right, especially against Malvern.

After Christmas, the filling of the gaps was a difficult business, especially owing to illness. However, the various combinations remained unbeaten and included in their victims Eton (4—3) and Winchester (2—1).

Among the newcomers the most promising were Saager (eventually right-half), Godden mi., Elliott came into his own at back and often played brilliantly. The responsibilities of captain steadied Watson, who quite recovered form. Vlasto did well in his one appearance against Winchester. Saager and Whitfield received 1st XI colours after Christmas.

CHARTERHOUSE v WELLINGTON

On Green. March 6th. Lost 1—5.

(Amberg)
Charterhouse had more of the game than the score suggests, and goals should have been scored before half-time. The Charterhouse defence did not mark closely enough, and Wellington gave an admirable lesson in how to swing the ball about. Their taking of corners, from which they scored two goals, was a fine art.
